1910 VIRTUAL TIME CONCEPTS WERE CONCEIVED TO SOLVE REAL TIME WORK CONSTRAINTS

The three constraints of project management are cost, time, and scope. Thomas Edison felt the phonograph was a marvel for the business world by providing virtual time. The phonograph was first marketed as breakthrough office equipment technology that could help in dictating typed correspondence. In the world of office correspondence everything had to be done in real time. Managers would speak each word of their letter to the secretary who would then write down these thoughts which were later typed out. Both the manager and secretary stenographer needed to be present simultaneously for dictating and note taking.

The creation of the phonograph suddenly created virtual time. Now managers could dictate their thoughts into a recording device without a secretary present to take notes. Recorded letters could be listened to when time was available to the typing secretary. A winning feature was that the information could be replayed at any selected point multiple times for clarity before typing. This cut down on mistaken errors in typed correspondence. Without the invention of auto correction, typed correspondence had to be "letter perfect" on the first attempt. Edison besides being a great inventor was keen at marketing his new innovations. He used his own inventions as novel new tools and mediums to further promote his products. The amusing irony of invention was that Edison would use his silent movie industry to promote his audio sound industry. In 1910 he created a silent docudrama film that had all the elements of today's infomercials. The film was entitled "The Stenographer's Friend or What was Accomplished by Edison's Business Phonograph". The skit showed how the Business Phonograph could free up real time work load for the office staff. It created a new concept in virtual time with the recorded dictated letter. The film had a happy ending. Technology enabled the office staff to go home on time with all the recorded business ready for the next business day. This 105 year old message of better business results from virtual time innovations can be played today. Download a copy of this early video infomercial on your own 21st Century device through the US Library of Congress.
